In detail

Peter has worked in marketing communications for 25 years, starting his career at Burberry in the European buying team then moving to L'Oreal where he spent 12 years in international marketing. After a four year stint with the Richemont luxury group, Peter joined forces with Mary Portas. Their agency Yellowdoor works with clients as far afield as Westfield, Louis Vuitton and Clarks. They have also launched a fashion collection for women with House of Fraser, overhauled a chain of charity shops for Save the Children and are now advising the UK Government on how to save our high streets.

What he offers you

Peter has unparalleled expertise in "how we shop" built through his unique experience working with both the largest fashion luxury and lifestyle brands, the biggest shopping centres and the remotest of high streets. He'll challenge retailers, marketers, salespeople and customer service professionals to think again about the new expectations of today's consumers and how best to engage with them in an increasingly complex and challenging world.

How he presents

Peter's style is informal and relaxed yet dynamic and challenging. He'll guide his audience through the forces at work and stimulate discussion on brands and customer experience. His presentations are inspirational and highly motivating.
