In detail

When offered a job as a studio audience warm up man at HTV Wales, Rod Woodward took a year out from university to pursue his childhood ambition of becoming a professional comedian. The rest is Geography! Having supported Patrick McGuinness on his 110-night nationwide tour and appeared with Russell Brand in Cardiff, he won the BBC comedy competition Funny Business in 2008. To celebrate Cardiff City reaching the FA Cup final, Rod wrote and performed a comedy song Do The Ayatollah backed by more than 100 Bluebirds fans.

What he offers you

Rod Woodward has been in big demand on the corporate circuit for many years and recent successes have gained him much wider public awareness. He is one of the most versatile comedians, and is equally at home with professional, round-table, sports and business audiences, as he is in a cabaret environment, a theatre, a comedy club or even a students' union.

How he presents

Rod puts his rave reviews down to his act which is a mixture of traditional comedy, alternative and the downright zany - a style that appeals right across the board.
