

Kirk Vallis

Creativity Leader, Coach and Behaviour Change Agent

"An expert in the development and harnessing of creativity and innovation within the work place"

Kirk Vallis serves as the Head of Creativity Development at Google, where he leads efforts to foster innovation and enhance problem-solving skills across the organisation. His work focuses on helping teams understand the behaviours and mindsets that consistently lead to breakthroughs and fresh solutions.

TOPICS:

- Creativity: the Most Undervalued Skill in the World
- Creativity as an Everyday Critical Business Tool
- Disrupt or Be Disrupted, It's your Choice
- Creative Leadership: Setting the Right Conditions for a Creative Culture
- Big Picture, Little Deeds: Iconic Leadership Actions that Unlock Ideas in Everyone

LANGUAGES:

He presents in English.

IN DETAIL:

As a mentor, Kirk collaborates with a variety of organisations, including Adidas, Mastercard, and Intuit, guiding them in embedding creativity as a key competency for everything from everyday decision-making to reinventing business models. Beyond his corporate work, Kirk merges his passion for creativity and sports by delivering creative leadership modules for elite programs in England Rugby and the English Football Association, helping shape leaders who can navigate complex challenges. He also supports social enterprises that promote diversity in business and sports leadership, such as Women Ahead and Moving Ahead.

WHAT HE OFFERS YOU:

Kirk delivers keynote speeches with a notable emphasis on encouraging leaders to identify and appreciate the unique potential of every individual within an organisation. He develops programmes for enhancing the relationship between culture and innovation, and creating and delivering the training to help individuals best realise their potential.

HOW HE PRESENTS:

Kirk's presentations are filled with real corporate applicable lessons. Audiences benefit from his high content, inspirational speeches, naturally and powerfully delivered.