IN DETAIL:

Pelé began playing for a local minor-league club when he was just a teenager. He is the all-time top scorer in the history of the Brazil national team. Since his full retirement in 1977 he has been an ambassador for football and has also undertaken various acting roles and commercial ventures. He was named Footballer of the Century by FIFA. Pelé's philanthropic values are in the areas of health, education and sport. All throughout his career, he has put countless energy and resources towards issues that promote equality and provide opportunity to the underprivileged while spreading values of peace and harmony to the masses. Football is the world's game, and through its popularity, Pelé hopes to unite everyone in his quest for a better world.
