Stephanie Hare

Technologist, Researcher & Broadcaster

"Stephanie is a leading specialist on the business, political, and social implications of facial recognition technology"

Stephanie Hare is a political risk analyst, historian and researcher in technology. Stephanie's most recent work includes research on how biometrics, surveillance, and big data affect our civil liberties and rights in the digital age.

TOPICS:

- The Future of Tech: Separating the Hype from the Valuable
- Ethics of Artificial Intelligence
- Metaverse
- Cyber Security in the Age of AI
- Biometrics

LANGUAGES:

She presents in English.

PUBLICATIONS:

2022 Technology is not Neutral: a Short Guide to Technology Ethics

IN DETAIL:

Stephanie was selected for the BBC Expert Women programme, contributes frequently to BBC World Television and the BBC World Service, and has published in the Financial Times, The Washington Post, the Guardian/Observer, the Harvard Business Review, and WIRED. Previously she worked at Accenture, Palantir, and Oxford Analytica, and held the Alistair Horne Visiting Fellowship at St Antony's College, Oxford. She earned a PhD and MSc from the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) and a BA from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, including a year at the University de la Sorbonne (Paris IV).

WHAT SHE OFFERS YOU:

Combining her comprehensive grasp of both policy and engineering aspects of technology, Stephanie skilfully incorporates diverse viewpoints in her presentations. She delves into the complex and multi-faceted inquiries surrounding the future, offering insightful analysis from various angles.

HOW SHE PRESENTS:

Stephanie's dynamic on-stage presence captivates and entertains audiences across the globe. Her warmth and humour foster an environment that brings out the best in audiences, making for an enriching and enjoyable experience for organisations.